Solicitation for a Cooperative Agreement

SUMMARY: The Department of Justice (DOJ), National Institute of Corrections (NIC) announces the availability of funds in FY'97 for a cooperative agreement to fund a "Structured Release and Violation Guidelines for Paroling Authorities" project.

PURPOSE: The National Institute of Corrections is seeking proposals for a cooperative agreement to assist selected paroling authorities in establishing consistent, responsible, and objective parole release decision making processes and procedures—and consistent violation response guidelines—at the state level. Examples of types of needs identified during earlier initiatives include data and risk assessment issues; dissatisfaction with current parole release and violation policies and procedures; and lack of written policy regarding release or violation responses. Release and violation concerns require paroling authorities to articulate their goals; and to develop consistent and explicit policies. To address these issues assistance will be provided to approximately five state paroling authorities, with the precise number receiving assistance to be determined by resource allocation as proposed by the awardee. The "Structured Release and Violation Guidelines for Paroling Authorities" project will be a collaborative effort between NIC program staff and the cooperative agreement recipient.

SUMMARY: The Department of Justice (DOJ), National Institute of Corrections (NIC) announces the availability of funds in FY 97 for a cooperative agreement to fund a "Responding to Probation and Parole Violations At the Local Level" project.

PURPOSE: Regardless of whether probation and parole agencies are administered at the state or local level, their response to violations significantly impact the demand for and use of jail beds and resources in local communities. Judicious use of intermediate responses—both while processing the violation and at disposition—can provide swift and appropriate responses for certain types of probation and parole violation behavior; while responsibly considering public safety, offender needs, institutional crowding, and resource allocation.

The Institute's Community Corrections Division will provide financial assistance in the form of a cooperative agreement to an agency or organization. This initiative emphasizes policy development by local teams including key decision makers and administrators like judges, county commissioners, local sheriffs, and probation and/or parole executives. Up to eight local jurisdictions from each of two states will be invited to participate in this project. Components of the initiative include, in part:

The awardee (organization receiving the cooperative agreement) will work with NIC in announcing the opportunity and selecting the states and local jurisdictions that will participate; they will work with the local jurisdictions on-site for the purpose of data and policy analysis before the seminar, as well as providing post-seminar technical assistance. Teams from local jurisdictions will attend a three to five day seminar with other jurisdictions from their state, and the awardee will be responsible for all seminar costs except participant transportation. A monograph will be prepared by the awardee to assess and document the impact of changes in probation and parole violation practices on participating jurisdictions. Use of video conferencing is encouraged to augment on-site activities when the technology satisfies project needs and is cost effective.

The "Responding to Probation and Parole Violations At the Local Level" project will be a collaborative effort between NIC program staff and the cooperative agreement recipient.
